NERC-ESRC Policy Engagement Training

Tender Reference Number: UKRI-3160

1. Introduction

UK Research and Innovation (UKRI) - The Natural Environment Research Council (NERC) and the Economic and Social Sciences Research Council (ESRC) seek to support academic researchers at post-doctoral level and above within our remits who are based within UK universities and Independent Research Organisations (IROs), to develop the knowledge and skills that will enable them to engage effectively with public policy. By doing so, we aim to equip them with the tools and skills to make a demonstrable difference to evidence-informed public policy with their research.

To ensure that this development opportunity is up-to-date and relevant, we invite proposals from organisations that are close to policy-makers and influencers/ government, have expertise in the application of research to policy, and specifically environmental and social sciences (including economics) research, across the broad range of environmental and social sciences.

2. Aims & Objectives

Aims

- To enhance capacity and capability in the environmental and social sciences academic research community (at post-doctoral level and above) to engage effectively with public policy at a range of levels (from the local and regional scale to the devolved administration and UK Government scale).
- To build a network of environmental and social sciences researchers with the skills and interests to engage effectively with policy.
- To gather evidence for the impact of environmental and social science research on public policy.

Objectives

- To develop and deliver training and skills development activities in public policy engagement to academic researchers in the environmental and social sciences:
 - To develop learning materials appropriate for researchers at any career stage, focusing on gaining knowledge and developing new skills that are important for policy engagement
 - To work with NERC and ESRC to develop the training and development content, so that it achieves our aim of building public policy engagement capacity within the UK environmental and social sciences research communities.
 - To work with NERC and ESRC, to agree how participants will be selected against a set of assessment criteria to ensure fairness and transparency and with due regard to equality, diversity and inclusion.
 - To manage the recruitment and selection process, with input and advice from NERC and ESRC
 - To deliver a face-to-face training and development activity for environmental scientists and social scientists, in collaboration, where appropriate, with stakeholders such as policy-makers and Government officials. Environmental scientists should comprise approximately 2/3 of participants.
 - To deliver a virtual training and development activity for environmental and social scientists, in collaboration, where appropriate, with stakeholders such as policy-makers and Government officials. As with the face-to-face training, environmental scientists should comprise approximately 2/3 of participants.
 - To develop and make available a set of on-line resources and learning materials (based on the above training activities) which can be accessed by the UKRI community at any time in the future.
- To maintain an alumni network of ambassadors for public policy engagement within the environmental and social sciences research communities, spread across different academic institutions, disciplines and geographic regions (for the duration of the Contract Term and ideally for at least 2 years beyond this).
- To create and sustain a community of environmental and social sciences researchers who have undertaken this training, and who continue to seek out pathways to engage with policy:
 - To engage with an alumni community, providing opportunities for them to network with one another (in person and virtually), and to disseminate their skills more widely within the research community, focusing on policy engagement. Examples could include workshops, working groups, seminars, mentoring.

- To collect alumni feedback and evidence for the impact of the training and development, and their subsequent engagement activities in the public policy space:
 - After the training has completed and at appropriate points, to contact the alumni to assess their experience, for continuous improvement.
 - At regular intervals, to contact the alumni to invite them to share their experiences of policy engagement, and the wider benefits of the training.
 - To share this information with NERC and ESRC, to inform our provision of support for public policy engagement and to produce case study examples of policy engagement/impact.

3. Background to the Requirement

NERC is the driving force of investment in environmental science in the UK. We advance the frontier of environmental science by commissioning new research, infrastructure and training that delivers valuable scientific breakthroughs. NERC invests public money in world-leading science, designed to help us sustain and benefit from our natural resources, predict and respond to natural hazards and understand environmental change.

NERC works in partnership with business, government, civil society, the public and the wider research community to shape the environmental research and innovation agenda. Our science provides knowledge, skills and technology that deliver sustainable economic growth and public wellbeing.

NERC provides funding for academic research and researchers, along with guidance, support and advocacy, to ensure that the benefits of environmental science research are widely shared. We promote dialogue between academic researchers, policy makers and legislators, and the knowledge and skills that they need to do this effectively. One of the NERC responsibilities (as outlined in the Higher Education and Research Act 2017) is to: 'facilitate, encourage and support knowledge exchange in relation to environmental science, technology and new ideas'. An important part of this is engaging with policy makers.

ESRC is the UK's largest funder of economic, social, behavioural and human data science. Economic, social and behavioural research provides an integrated approach to understanding how society interacts at every level, from the individual to whole systems and from the local to the global. ESRC research is designed to make a difference. It provides the evidence and independent expert insight necessary to understand how society and the economy are changing, how aspirations can be realised and how people, households, communities, businesses and governments can work to create positive change. Understanding what works in public policy and practice is an important part of the research ESRC funds.

To engage effectively with the policy-making process, researchers require a range of specialist knowledge, skills and contacts that they may not find opportunities to develop during the early stages of an academic research career.

Fostering good partnerships with policy makers requires an understanding of the pressures which policy makers are often under to find policy 'solutions', and also a willingness to understand and engage with the perspectives and expertise that policy makers bring. Policy makers themselves may be less familiar with the contribution that environmental and social science research can make. Academic researchers in the environmental and social sciences need, therefore, to be able to clearly articulate the different and distinctive contribution that their disciplines can make to informed and reflective policy making.

4. Scope

1. We would like bidders to propose a multi-day, face-to-face training session(s), suitable for academic researchers (at post-doctoral level and above) working in a wide variety of environmental and social science disciplines and based in institutions across NERC and ESRC's remit (for further information, see the NERC and ESRC websites here: <https://www.ukri.org/about-us/nerc/>, Economic and Social Research Council \(ESRC\) – UKRI).
2. We would like bidders to propose a multi-day, virtual training session(s) suitable for academic researchers (at post-doctoral level and above) working in a wide variety of environmental and social science disciplines and based in institutions across NERC and ESRC's remit. This would include similar material/ content, and deliver the same outcomes, as the in-person course but would be accessible to those who are unable to attend in person.
3. We would like bidders to propose a package of on-line training materials which would be available to members of the UKRI community who would like to learn more about engaging with public policy but are unable to attend the courses. These materials should be made available (as far as practicable) on the UKRI website.
4. Bidders should ensure that all training comprises a mixture of discipline-specific sessions (tailored to the environmental sciences community and the social sciences communities) and core training which addresses cross-cutting skills and foundational knowledge to the entire cohort. The training should also cover interdisciplinarity - helping scientists to engage with other scientists across disciplines whilst working in a policy setting.
5. We expect bidders to detail the number and structure of training sessions they would run over the course of each financial year, including the number of participants for each course / training. The audience for face-to-face and virtual sessions should be split approximately 2/3 environmental scientists and 1/3 social scientists.
6. UKRI has set aside up to £80,000 (Excl. VAT) to cover travel and subsistence for face-to-face course participants only. UKRI will process all T&S claims directly. Bidders need to consider this sum when proposing and planning face-to-face events e.g. venue, location(s).
7. Post-award, within the first month, the successful Supplier is required to complete an Equality Impact Assessment.

5. Requirement

UKRI–NERC and UKRI-ESRC invite proposals for the design, development and delivery of a training and development activity that will enable academic researchers (at post-doctoral level and above) in the environmental and social sciences to engage effectively with policy-makers. The bidder should outline how they will recruit and select candidates for this training, with guidance from NERC and ESRC, to ensure fairness and transparency, and in line with the UKRI's equality, diversity and inclusion strategy – UKRI, NERC diversity and inclusion action plan 2022 to 2025 – UKRI, ESRC equality, diversity and inclusion action plan – UKRI and NERC best practice principles in doctoral recruitment – UKRI.

NERC and ESRC are committed to diversity, equity and inclusion. We want the training and development opportunities to be accessible to a diverse range of eligible candidates. The bidder should consider and state how this will be embedded within the application and selection process and overall training programme. They should also indicate how the training opportunities will be made open, accessible, and flexible to enable all potential participants to engage.

The supplier will be required to collect and process GDPR data in accordance with the Data Protection Act 2018 and the UK General Data Protection Regulation, and to share relevant data with UKRI. The supplier will be required to complete a GDPR questionnaire following Contract award conclusion. See Appendix C, Terms & Conditions of Contract, Schedule 6.

The activities will be offered to academic researchers at post-doctoral level and above, based at different UK universities and eligible Independent Research Organisations (IROs). A list of eligible IROs can be found on the UKRI website here: Eligible independent research organisations and Catapult centres – UKRI

By the end of the training, participants will be equipped with knowledge and understanding of government, policy-making, regulating and legislating, including the complexities involved in creating a successful policy, and the challenges for researchers in engaging with policy-makers, regulators, legislators and the policy-making process. They will be able to use these resources to reinforce and strengthen their practice individually and as a cohort – for example, identifying possible routes to engagement, including through the Civil Service, Parliament and devolved administrations, arms-length bodies, local government, and a range of external influencers, and they will be able to plan how to use these routes most effectively to bring their research to bear on policy questions. The training will also help them to develop their communication and influencing skills, including how to build an influential social media presence in order to effectively convey the subject matter of their research and the key messages that it has for policy.

Another aim of these skills development activities is to build a network of highly skilled environmental and social science researchers within universities and IROs with the capacity to engage with public policy, in order that they can share knowledge among themselves, act as ambassadors for research in policy contexts, and provide NERC and ESRC with evidence for the impact of funding for research in the environmental and social sciences. The organisation that delivers this training and development will be ideally placed to continue to engage with the alumni, providing a forum for communication that will support this network. (for the duration of this contract and ideally for at least 2 years beyond this). They will also be expected to connect up to broader relevant UKRI investment activities such as the UKRI Policy Fellowships scheme and the UKRI Parliamentary Thematic Research Leads.

Organisations interested in delivering policy engagement training will be required to provide evidence for the following:

1. Knowledge of the nature of environmental and social science research, and the contribution that it can make to policy making. Ideally, this would involve an understanding and experience of working with environmental and social science academic researchers in this context.
2. Knowledge of work in environmental and social science research which has current policy impact, in order to identify appropriate contributors and case studies.
3. Awareness of the challenges faced by policy makers in engaging with academic researchers, especially any issues that are distinctive to environmental and social science research.
4. Relationships with senior policy makers and influencers, in order to identify and draw on contributors to the training proposed.
5. Details of how the various training and development activities will be conducted and the frequency of the courses or activities, to achieve the stated objectives.
6. Capabilities to review, research and update training and development content annually, to keep it up to date with changes in the policy landscape, and developments in Higher Education research policy, which may affect knowledge exchange and research impact.
7. Ability and resources to develop and deliver the materials for training and development over an 18 month period, and to coordinate a network of alumni, with only minimal guidance and input from NERC and ESRC.
8. Ability and resources to ensure effective management and operation of the training and development programme
9. Ability and resources to engage regularly with NERC and ESRC (around specific milestones – to be specified by the supplier) to develop, deliver and evaluate the training and development provided.
